

Biodata: Marco Cancino & Gonzalo Cabello

Marco Cancino is an academic researcher at Universidad Andres Bello in Santiago, Chile. He received an MSc in Applied Linguistics and Second Language Acquisition from the University of Oxford, UK, where he did work on vocabulary acquisition and topic interest. He was also awarded a doctoral degree in Applied Linguistics and Education at the University of Bristol, UK. His main interests are related to the use of technological tools and ChatGPT in the classroom. He also supervises postgraduate thesis work in his area, focusing on aspects related to vocabulary learning, language learning strategies, and online translation tools.

Gonzalo Cabello is currently an EFL teacher at a high school in Santiago, Chile. He graduated from the English Pedagogy programme at the Universidad Andres Bello in 2021, where he did research on foreign language speaking anxiety. His main research interests are related to EFL teaching and learning, the impact of anxiety on language development, and how online teaching settings influence specific linguistic skills.