Daniel Ginting received his doctorate in English Language Teaching from State University in Malang (2015). He is a member of the IMOOC (Indonesian Massive Open Online Course) module development team, initiated by the Regional Language Official (RELO) of the American Embassy, 2016-2017. In 2018, he was the specialist responsible for facilitating IMOOC instructors. Daniel is currently a teaching staff at English Letters Study Program, Faculty of Languages and Arts, Universitas Ma Chung, Indonesia.

Ross Woods obtained his Doctor of Humanities in London. He served in Indonesia from 1978-98 in many roles, including teaching in an international school, research supervisor, Assistant Dean, college lecturer, board member, language program coordinator, and advisor to various institutions. Since 1998, he has been Principal or Academic Dean of the Australian Centre for Advanced Studies and is currently President of Worldwide University in Arizona, USA.

Kartika Nuswantara is a senior lecturer at Institut Teknologi Sepuluh Nopember (ITS) in Surabaya. Her research interests include language learning and teaching either in English Language Teaching or Bahasa Indonesia. She also has particular concerns about literacy for the community. She gives training to a group of lower-income communities to improve their literacy skills for helping them cope with problems encountered in their lives. To help learn the languages and strengthen language skills simultaneously, she has developed several Android-based applications that students of different ages can use. She is currently involved in the community engagement activity to help families improve their resilience by finding new life skills. Should any researchers be interested in the same field, she is available to be contacted through tika@mku.its.ac.id.

Ounu Zakiy Sukaton is a lecturer of linguistics based at Ma Chung University. His expertise lies in the intersection of sociolinguistics and phonetics-based research. Some of his published works are the semantics of Javanese cultural words and the ongoing merger of an Australian English variety. He also collaborates with other researchers in fields such as visual design communication and psychology.

Vincentius Valiandy Jiuangga was born at Malang, October 3 1993. He received his Master's Degree majoring in Teachers of Chinese to Speakers of Other Languages from Guangxi Normal University in China (2018). In 2019 he participated in Teacher Training for Mandarin Teachers at Dongbei Normal University in China. He is a member of APSMI (Association of Chinese Language Teachers in Indonesia) and PSMTI (Indonesia Chinese Social Association). He has been one of the Mandarin lecturers at Ma Chung University, Indonesia, since 2019.
